The Toronto United Church Council was established in 1892 under the Methodist Church (Canada) as the Methodist Social Union of Toronto. The Unions objectives were to “promote fellowship, social intercourse, and spiritual life among members of the Methodist Churches; Cultivate the connexional principal of Methodism; to give advice and assistance to church indebtedness and location of churches and church buildings; and in practicable ways to promote the interest of the Methodist Church in Toronto”. The Majority of its work involved responding to pleas from Toronto area churches for financial aid.

In 1894, The Toronto City Missionary Society of the Methodist Church was established. The Object of the society was to carry out city mission work in Fred Victor Mission as well as other locations around the city as deemed desirable. The directors of the society were appointed annually by the quarterly board of the participating Methodist congregations. The society directed Victor Home, Italian missions, Fred Victor Mission, and fresh air work in the city of Toronto.

In 1901 the society changed its name to The Fred Victor Mission Society of the Methodist Church, while its directives remained the same. In 1907, the name of the society was again changed in order to better reflect the work that they did. The new name was The Toronto City and Fred Victor Mission Society of the Methodist Church.

In 1912, the Methodist Social Union of Toronto amalgamated with the Toronto City and Fred Victor Mission Society of the Methodist church to create the Methodist Union of Toronto. This new Union carried out city mission, church extension and social service work in Toronto and its suburbs. It also had an advisory role in decisions such as the location of new church sites and the erection or removal of churches. Given the power to acquire property by purchase, gift or lease and money by bequest, donation or subscription, the Union was able to maintain Trust Funds and fulfill its objectives. The Loan Fund made available interest-free loans for the purchase of new sites, the construction of buildings on existing sites, and assistance to financially troubled churches.

In 1926, the Methodist Union at 141 Jarvis Street was officially replaced by the Toronto Church Extension and Mission Union of the United Church which continued the activities pursued by the Methodist Union of Toronto, the former Toronto Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church of Canada, and the Missionary Society of the Congregational Church. The Union also advised on the selection of sites for new churches in the three Toronto Presbyteries (Toronto Centre, Toronto East and Toronto West). When allocating financial aid to churches, especially regarding mortgages, the Finance Committee of the Union evaluated each situation individually according to the needs and financial strength of the community involved. In order to undertake its home mission work, the Union could: acquire real or personal property; mortgage, hold or dispose of property; receive money from various sources; and maintain a trust fund.

The Union at 139 Jarvis Street in Toronto was unofficially renamed the Toronto Home Missions Committee in 1933. It changed its name officially in 1935 to the Toronto Home Missions Council of the United Church of Canada. At this time the Council also underwent a change in structure. The council was made up of representatives of the three Toronto presbyteries, and the Secretary of the Board of Home Missions. Financially, the Council was supported by the Board of Home Missions and donations of the Toronto Congregations and individuals. The Council remained at the same address, and continued to direct the same work.

In 1973 the Toronto Home Missions Council updated its objectives and changed its name to the Toronto United Church Council. The duties of the Council, according to a 1972 reprinting of its constitution, were to supervise and administer, in conjunction with the Board of Home Missions, the four Presbyteries of Metropolitan Toronto and Toronto Conference, the work of City Missions, Church Extension and other areas of evangelism and social service assigned to it; to promote welfare of the churches and missions in the Toronto Presbyteries; to have oversight of additional work of common interest such as the Victor Home for Women and Fresh Air Work; to establish, maintain and expend funds available for prosecution of this work; to receive bequests, donations and subscriptions for this work; to present the claims of the work to the congregation of the Presbyteries concerned; and to acquire property required for its purpose. In 1973 The Fred Victor Mission began steps to become an incorporated entity. In 1984, the Fred Victor Mission became incorporated with a director appointed by the Toronto Conference Executive. The Victor Home became incorporated as the Massey Center for Women in 1989. In 2008 the Dufferin - Peel Church Extension Presbytery amalgamated with the Toronto United Church Council under the name Toronto United Church Council.

SERIES 3/Subseries 5: Records of the sites and lots. -- 1911-1990 -- 76 cm of textual records.

One of the functions of the Toronto United Church Council was to locate areas of urban growth and to decide where within these areas of development to locate a church. Prospective church sites were purchased, sometimes prior to any development, in anticipation for where a church would be needed. Council would sometimes purchase multiple sites in an area and allow a congregation to decide where it would like the church to be located, with the unneeded sites then sold.

Subseries consist of correspondence, legal and financial records, 1911-1990, regarding the purchase and sale of the sites and lots of the Toronto United Church Council and its antecedent bodies. Most of the Union and Mission Council's land was purchased and only a small portion was bequeathed. Files are arranged alphabetically by property name.

SERIES 4/subseries 1: Records of the Mission Boards. -- 1894-1918 -- 15 cm of textual records.

In 1894 the Toronto City Missionary Society of the Methodist Church of Canada began, with the donation by Hart A. Massey of a building on the corner of Queen and Jarvis Streets, known as the Fred Victor Mission. The Society was started for the purpose of carrying out evangelistic and mission work in the city of Toronto in connection with the Methodist Church. The work was not limited to the Fred Victor Mission location.

In 1901 the Society officially changed their name to the Fred Victor Mission Society of the Methodist Church, as it had become known colloquially, in honour of the original donation by Mr. Massey in memory of his son Fred Victor. The society remained the same in all other aspects. By 1906 the Fred Victor Mission Society included mission work throughout the city of Toronto, including: The Fred Victor Mission which housed mother's meetings, children's work and classes such as household science; Italian Missions located at Agnes Street United Church and Elm Street United Church; The Victor Home for Young Women, Victor Industrial Institute, and Victor Annex.

On November 14, 1907, The Fred Victor Mission Society decided to change its name in order to better to reflect the work that it did. It was renamed as Toronto City and Fred Victor Mission Society of the Methodist Church. In 1912 the Methodist Social Union of Toronto and the Toronto City and Fred Victor Mission Society of the Methodist Church amalgamated to create the Methodist Union of Toronto. The Department of City Missions and Social Service oversaw the mission side of the work that was done by the Methodist Union of Toronto.

SERIES 4/subseries 2: Records of the Fred Victor Mission. -- 1843-1990. -- 17 cm of textual records.

The mission began as a Sunday school for neglected children in 1886, supported by a few members of Metropolitan Methodist Church. Later once approval was received from Conference, an appeal for donations was made on behalf of the mission at church services. The Fred Victor Mission, in its current location at Queen and Jarvis, was opened in 1894 under the direction of the Toronto City Missionary Society of the Methodist Church. The building was a gift from Hart A. Massey and the mission was named in memory of his son, Fred Victor. The mission was run directly by the Board of Directors of the Society. In 1973 the Fred Victor Mission began steps to become an incorporated entity. In 1984, the Fred Victor Mission became incorporated with a director appointed by the Toronto Conference Executive.

Subseries consist of the predominantly property records, legal records and correspondence of the Fred Victor Mission, 1843-1990

Series 4/subseries 3: Records of Victor Home for Women. -- 1887-1990. -- 45 cm of textual records.

Victor Home began unofficially as early as 1900, at the Fred Victor Mission, where expectant mothers were accepted by the deaconess. In the minutes of the Fred Victor Mission Society of the Methodist Church this work was informally referred to as "rescue work". In 1904, it was decided to make this a separate mission department and Victor Home for Women was opened under the name "Door of Hope" at 295 Jarvis Street. In 1904, the old Metropolitan Church parsonage at 266 Jarvis Street was acquired after it was decided that more space was required to carry out the work of the home. In 1913, 341 Jarvis Street was purchased for the Home to expand their work which included a Well Baby clinic.

In 1939 Victor Home was run by a 16 member management executive that reported to the Toronto Home Missions Council.

Until 1957, adoptions for mothers at the homes were arranged by the Victor Home. At this time, in response to legal actions taken against the home and the Toronto Home Missions Council in 1956, it was decided to temporarily transfer adoption processes to the Children's Aid Society. In 1958 this arrangement was made official.

In 1989 Victor Home for Women was incorporated as Massey Center for Women.

Subseries consists of Board of Directors records, 1983-1986; general correspondence, 1935-1982; Housing Project records, 1986-1988, Task Force records, 1986-1989; property records (including deeds), 1887-1990.

Records relating to personnel are restricted on a file by file basis for seventy-five years beyond the last dated item in the file. All researchers using these records must sign a "United Church Archives Research Agreement" (Form 26) since these records may include personal information on church staff, members, or clients.
